

Robert,

I have spoken with The Golden Spider about your ambitions for Mead.

He laughed a please, rumbling laugh. He says that The League would be nothing if its citizens did not have such ambitions. He adds that he agrees with the potential you see in Mead.

But he will not offer any trading of favours or aid. He thinks that there is little ambition in the people of Mead and the land in which it sits in that direction and that it will be the work of decades, not seasons to bring about such change.

The Lord of the Loom will rarely burden someone with the trading of favours when he believes that what he could offer would make no difference in their ambition.

May you be rich in favours and friends
