

Carving the runes is more than a skill, it is an art. The material speaks to the Runesmiths and guides them what runes should be carved. The most skilled smiths can hear the metal whisper as they carve the runes, guiding their hand.

This last season, a pattern has been forming. Certain runes have been coming to the fore more often. Xun, the rune of Transformation appears coupled next to Sular, the rune of Discovery.

Casting the Runes, these two seem coupled. Not only do they appear more often that they have in the last few years, but they seem attached. Where one is cast the other seems to follow.

There is something magical in the air in Wintermark, where before there was once darkness where foul Thule curses affected all the Traditions, this is different. There is something with potential, something with the possibility to be great.