

In the weeks leading up the Spring Equinox summit, word reaches the quiet stone halls of Highguard that a foreign champion is abroad on the Trods. This Suranni “noble” is bragging about how he’s going to prove the supremacy of his patrons, the Suranni “Gods”, by defeating a champion of the Way of Virtue in a duel. Loud-mouthed though he is, his companions – including a high-ranking priest of the “God” Suran – have so far kept him from unseemly brawls, in spite of all his bragging. He will only fight at Anvil, they say.

In the weeks leading up the Spring Equinox summit, word reaches the quiet stone halls of Highguard that a foreign champion is abroad on the Trods. This Suranni “noble” is bragging about how he’s going to prove the supremacy of his patrons, the Suranni “Gods”, by defeating a champion of the Way of Virtue in a duel. Loud-mouthed though he is, his companions – including a high-ranking priest of the “God” Suran – have so far kept him from unseemly brawls, in spite of all his bragging. He will only fight at Anvil, they say.

In the weeks leading up the Spring Equinox summit, word reaches the quiet stone halls of Highguard that a foreign champion is abroad on the Trods. This Suranni “noble” is bragging about how he’s going to prove the supremacy of his patrons, the Suranni “Gods”, by defeating a champion of the Way of Virtue in a duel. Loud-mouthed though he is, his companions – including a high-ranking priest of the “God” Suran – have so far kept him from unseemly brawls, in spite of all his bragging. He will only fight at Anvil, they say.

In the weeks leading up the Spring Equinox summit, word reaches the quiet stone halls of Highguard that a foreign champion is abroad on the Trods. This Suranni “noble” is bragging about how he’s going to prove the supremacy of his patrons, the Suranni “Gods”, by defeating a champion of the Way of Virtue in a duel. Loud-mouthed though he is, his companions – including a high-ranking priest of the “God” Suran – have so far kept him from unseemly brawls, in spite of all his bragging. He will only fight at Anvil, they say.

In the weeks leading up the Spring Equinox summit, word reaches the quiet stone halls of Highguard that a foreign champion is abroad on the Trods. This Suranni “noble” is bragging about how he’s going to prove the supremacy of his patrons, the Suranni “Gods”, by defeating a champion of the Way of Virtue in a duel. Loud-mouthed though he is, his companions – including a high-ranking priest of the “God” Suran – have so far kept him from unseemly brawls, in spite of all his bragging. He will only fight at Anvil, they say.