

Imperial Friends,

It seems that your expedition to Greenwall was very successful. We believe that Hayaak the Murderer has received the message, and divined its intent. From what my scouts have been able to observe, the Jotun in that area are in some disarray after the death of Jarl Kalasbairn.

I have revealed my involvement in the endeavour, and as hoped I have been instructed to return north and assist Tathenon The Gyre. It will probably take some time for me to settle in to my new position, so I suspect it will be a season or two before you hear from me again.

Until then, I wish you good fortune in all that you do.

Yours,

Fellow Citizen Andronikos,

I am pleased to say that we are now members of the same Empire. Naturally, this changes the situation somewhat with regards to the reward Merchant Prince Kaliact wishes to provide you with. It is regrettable that we are unable to arrange any of the things requested previously. I will be in Anvil around Seven o'Clock on Friday Night, and will be consulting with the leading fashion houses of The League. It is amongst my Ambitions to set out on my own and start a tailoring business which will soon rival any in Tassato or Sarvos.

As one last piece of official business for Merchant Prince Kaliact before I leave her service, if you were to drop in on me at that time we could discuss a more feasible reward.

*Yours in Virtue,
Odhrán Larnach,
(She/Her)*

p.s. Since we both have information about one another which would be very damaging in the wrong hands, I trust that I can rely on your continued discretion? It may also come to pass that Kaliact or myself have need of your particular skills in future, I hope you will be amenable to further work if it becomes necessary.

Ambassador

As I am sure you are aware, a terrible betrayal has been wrought upon both our peoples. The traitor Kaliact has attempted to steal the territory of Spiral from The Grendel and made cause with The League. Myself, and a few others, have established an encampment of True Grendel and are resisting the traitor's tyranny. Every day, more gather to my banner.

I realise that this situation cannot endure forever so I am sending my most trusted advisor, Frangan, to negotiate a surrender with you. I hope we are able to resolve this situation amicably. He will be at Anvil around One o'Clock on Sunday afternoon. He will seek you out in the Urizen camp. You may wish to have one or two Generals, or other militarily minded folk, with you to help with the details. If so, that will be acceptable to us.

Yours in Fidelity, Paymaster Muireall

Most Esteemed Ambassador

I trust by now you will have received word from my mistress, Paymaster Murieall. She has sent me to 'negotiate' with you for the return of Spiral into Grendel hands.

Frankly, the offer she has asked me to present is ludicrous, and no person in so great a position as yours would entertain it. Instead, allow me to make an alternative offer. If you meet with me as planned, at One o'Clock on Sunday, and bring a suitably large payment, we can discuss other methods to resolve this issue.*

*I look forward to a Prosperous trade,
Secretary Frangan,
North Maraeve Trading Consortium*

Naturally we will negotiate in person, but I believe for what I am offering something on the order of Sixty Thrones, or equivalent value in Mana Crystals, should suffice.*
