This letter is addressed to The Red Fox,

9 must confess that there is a certain novelty in attempting to utilise the Winged Messenger ritual to send a message to an individual who may not actually exist, and may never have existed. 9 console myself that this is not a waste of mana, but a valid experiment into the potential, and limitations, of this magic.

Working on the assumption that this letter has made its way to the intended recipient, consequently affirming that you do exist, 9 offer my greetings. 9 am Artellus, Arbiter of White Spire Ascending in Zenith, and 9 have pressing need of your services.

It is my desire to purchase an item that may or may not be for sale. Specifically, I refer to the sword known as Nightripper's Bane. It is claimed that this item is a virtuous Courage relic and was used as a sign of exemplification for Damaris of Cantiarch's Hold in Highguard. I held little hope of acquiring this relic when Damaris lived, but I understand she is taking a, presumably short, journey through the Labyrinth of Ages.

9 do not know what the Highguard Chapter of Cantiarch's Hold intends for the relic now. My suspicion is that they will be reticent to part with it. 9 had tasked one individual with arranging its availability, but they have displayed no interest in doing so. Consequently, as my situation becomes more pressing, 9 consider alternatives that previously would have been inconceivable. 9t is, after all, what Ambition and Courage requires.

My request of you is as follows:

Firstly, 9 would ask that you acknowledge receipt of this message, that 9 might know it has been received. As 9 rarely leave Zenith, this may need to be through the form of a Winged Messenger.

Secondly, if you do respond, 9 would wish to know if the matter of arranging for Nightripper's Bane to become available for sale was one that you felt able to assist with.

Thirdly, if you were willing to assist, what your price for doing so would be.

Naturally, if you do not exist, or our plight is of no interest to you, then 9 shall expect no response. However, whilst 9 would not wish to expose a lack of poise, it is my belief that this is a matter of great import to the whole Empire.

May you always keep your poise in testing times,

Artellus Whitespire Arbiter of the White Spire Ascending Zenith